Night Before Christmas 3D Screensaver

A night before Christmas is a festive day of the year. It is at night when everything is quiet, when magic happens, when everything seems to have changed to a new life, to a new hope. It is a time of miracles. We will think about how to decorate the house, that is, what kind of mood we should prepare to be touched by some magical miracle. A night before Christmas is not the time to go to sleep. It is a time when you will have to make some special preparations in order to receive an incredible Christmas gift. In the bower under a snowed-down Christmas Tree you will find unexpected gifts! Everything will have to be perfectly arranged for the best outcome. You will have to wait and not to miss anything! Happy Christmas Eve!Q: Getting error in resolving Json data with HttpClient I have two asp.net mvc web API controllers as shown below. I am using HttpClient to resolve json data from the server. I am getting error as The remote server returned an error: (401) Unauthorized. I have created basic authentication and tried to get the data from server with the username and password I am sending in the request body. I am getting the same error even when I pass the credentials in the headers. How can I resolve this error? Is there any change I need to make to HttpClient when I send the request? I am using the below code for the call. HttpClientHandler hd = new HttpClientHandler(); hd.Credentials = new NetworkCredential("user", "password"); var http = new HttpClient(hd); http.DefaultRequestHeaders.Accept.Add(new MediaTypeWithQualityHeaderValue("application/json")); var uri = new Uri(""); var getuser = new HttpRequestMessage(HttpMethod.Get, uri); getuser.Headers.Authorization = new AuthenticationHeaderValue("Basic", Convert.ToBase64String(Encoding.ASCII.GetBytes(string.Format("{0}:{1}", "user", "password"))))); var response = await http.SendAsync(getuser); A: Use Basic Authorization (username and password separated by &): var headers = new AuthenticationHeaderValue("Basic", "username&password"); http.DefaultRequestHead
